(54) TOE CAP AND TOE CAP EMBEDDED SHOE
(57) The present invention provides a structure of a toe cap and a shoe having the toe cap embedded which does not disturb foot movement such as walking while protecting a toe against lateral collision with an object such as a wheel of a dolly. The toe cap to cover a toe in a state of being embedded to a shoe toe includes a cup-shaped sell body which is formed by connecting a front end wall, bilateral side walls and an upper face wall with a gentle curved face, and an extension side wall disposed at least to one side wall as rearwardly extending a rear and edge of the side wall. The shoe having the toe cap embedded can sufficiently protect the toe even when an impact is applied from the outer side (i.e., the little toe) direction of the toe of which protection is not sufficient with a normal toe cap embedded shoe.

- (57) This invention provides brominated sorbent compositions which are brominated inorganic sorbents having about 0.5 wt% about 20 wt% bromine therein, based on the total weight of the brominated inorganic sorbent. Methods for preparing brominated sorbent compositions are also provided, as are methods for reducing mercury emissions employing brominated sorbents. In the methods for preparing the brominated inorganic sorbents, the bromine source is elemental bromine and/or hydrogen bromine.

(54) REDUCTION OF MERCURY EMISSIONS FROM CEMENT PLANTS

(57) This invention provides methods for reducing emissions of mercury from a cement plant comprising at least a kiln, a particulate collection device, collected particulates, an exhaust gas stream, a heater, and a mercury scrubber, wherein the heater and mercury scrubber are upstream from the kiln. The method comprise directing the collected particulates through the heater, to form volatilized mercury species from the collected particulates; directing the collected particulates from the heater downstream toward the kiln; and directing the volatilize mercury species to the mercury scrubber. The exhaust gas stream exits the particulate collection device and is not directed into the heater. Optional steps include injecting a mercury sorbent at one or more points between the kiln and the particulate collection device.

Centrifugal force acts on gas bubbles entrained between liquid slugs moving radially outward through the capillaries which may be radial, tangential or continuously curved. Compressed gas is collected in the annular space. A gas-liquid emulsion is fed to the capillaries by an inboard emulsification device. The emulsification may include a vortex generator, an ejector or a venturi injector, all feeding the gas-liquid mixture into the inboard ends of the capillaries. The capillaries are formed in a series of discs, coaxially stacked with outer disc ends open to the annular space. Capillary inlets may be perpendicular, tangential or may define a venturi jet.
